This year, Ganesh Chaturthi at Sanskriti Kids was distinguished by a notable commitment to sustainability, featuring the introduction of eco-friendly and green Ganesh idols. Traditionally, Ganesh idols crafted from plaster of Paris and adorned with chemically intensive paints pose significant environmental hazards. Their immersion contaminates water bodies, disrupts aquatic ecosystems, and leaves behind non-biodegradable waste. Conversely, eco-friendly celebrations employ idols made from natural clay and painted with organic dyes, ensuring they dissolve without harming the environment. This transition not only reduces environmental impact but also fosters a sense of responsibility and awareness among young minds. By opting for green Ganesh idols, Sanskriti Kids not only honored tradition but also embraced a future where cultural celebrations coexist harmoniously with nature, encouraging communities to adopt similar practices for a healthier planet.

PTM II

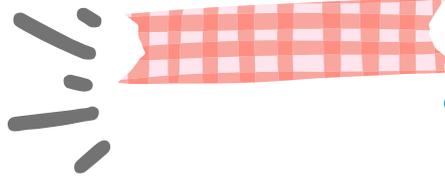

Collaboration

Parent-Teacher Meetings (PTMs) are crucial for fostering a collaborative relationship between parents and educators, which is essential for a child's academic and personal development. Organized at institutions like Sanskriti Kids, PTMs provide a platform for parents to engage with teachers and gain insights into their child's progress, strengths, and areas needing improvement. These meetings facilitate open communication, allowing parents to share their observations and concerns while teachers can offer tailored advice and strategies to support the child's learning journey at home.
